Comm.: The reading $r\bar{a}jasaudha$ is preferable for poetical reasons, as explained in Hanneder 2020, p. 128–130. Also, the $Jyotsn\bar{a}$ explains that the $alamk\bar{a}ra$ here is a comparison ($up-am\bar{a}$), which consists of four elements: (1) a particle expressing the comparison (iva), (2) the object compared (upameya), i.e., the $hathayogavidy\bar{a}$ leading to Rājayoga ($r\bar{a}jayo-gapr\bar{a}pik\bar{a}$), (3) the property compared, that is, effortlessness ($an\bar{a}y\bar{a}sena$) and, most importantly, (4) an image to compare with, which in this case is $r\bar{a}jasaudha$. This idea is confirmed by Brahmānanda, when he sums up and completes the poetical details as: $yath\bar{a}$ pronnatasaudham $\bar{a}rodhum$ icchor adhirohiny $an\bar{a}y\bar{a}sena$ $saudhapr\bar{a}pik\bar{a}$ bhavati evam $hathad\bar{a}pik\bar{a}pi$ evam pronnatarajayogam evam e

The Sanskrit poeticians explain that when some elements of a comparison remains unexpressed we get an incomplete (lupta) comparison. Often words like iva or yathā are missing or the common property, but if we read rājayoga we lose the upamāna (i.e., rājasaudha). One part of the comparison should not be missing. But from the perspective of alaṃkāraśāstra the verse has a problem that has surely caused the dilemma: it either leaves the upamēya or the upamāna incomplete. Brahmānanda has mentioned both yathā adhirohinī saudhaprāpikā bhavati evam hathadīpikā rājayogaprāpikā bhavati, but had to supply

 $r\bar{a}jasaudha$, while his text reads $r\bar{a}jayoga$. But to have the upameya in the text is odd. Even Brahmānanda could only know of the image ($r\bar{a}jasaudha$) from the alternative reading he did not accept. However, it seems likely that the author would have included the $upam\bar{a}na$ in the text, as in our critical text, so that the reader would know that the upper terrace of the palace is an image for $r\bar{a}jayoga$. It is further likely that the substitution of $r\bar{a}jayoga$ for $r\bar{a}jasaudha$ was the result of the tendency to insert the word yoga in the opening verses of the text wherever possible, even where it does not fit, as can be seen in 1.2d (hathayogopadisyate) and 1.3b ($r\bar{a}jayogam\ aj\bar{a}nat\bar{a}m$). In the latter case the poetical image has also been lost.

The metre of 1.1 is Indravajrā

Transl.: Having bowed to the glorious guru, the Lord, the yogi Svātmārāma has taught the system of Haṭhayoga solely for [attaining] Rājayoga.

Comm.: The reading yogopadiśyate (J7,J10,N17,W4, etc.) is only possible if one accepts that double sandhi is a feature of the style of composition, which it is not. Moreover, this reading appears to have resulted from an attempt to replace the word $vidy\bar{a}$ with yoga in the opening verses of the text.

bhrāntyā bahumatadhvānte rājayogam ajānatām | kevalaṃ rājayogāya haṭhavidyopadiśyate ||

Comm.: Most witnesses have rājayogam ajānatām ('for those ignorant of Rājayoga') in 1.3b. While this reading is well attested by the manuscripts transmission of the Haṭhapradīpikā and some manuscripts of the Haṭharatnāvalī (note that P,T,t1 of the critical edition [Gharote 2009: 5 n. 2] have rājamārgam ajānataḥ), the reading of a royal path (rājamārgam) is consistent with the metaphor of people wandering from a path in the darkness and, therefore, most probably authorial.

In 1.1d both kṛpākaraḥ and kṣamākaraḥ are attested. The former is preserved by the V1 and group 2 whereas the latter by some manuscripts of the delta group. Since the context is the author helping yogis who have strayed from the royal path, kṛpākara makes better sense. As Brahmānanda notes, this compound can be understood as one who is compassionate $(krp\bar{a} + kara)$ or one who is a mine (i.e., a rich source) of compassion $(krp\bar{a} + \bar{a}kara)$. In the Devanagari transmission, the ksa of $ksam\bar{a}karah$ may have arisen as a mistake for kr.

Comm.: The word athavā ('or') is difficult to construe here. Brahmānanda understands it as conjunction (athavāśabdaḥ samuccaye), and this is how we have interpreted it. The variant $mah\bar{a}yog\bar{\imath}$ in group 4c (G5, J4, J11, Ko, P15) avoids this difficulty, but is probably an attempt to remove the difficulty of understanding $athav\bar{a}$. One could emend to $tath\bar{a}$ but this would be a bold intervention given the weight of evidence supporting ' $thav\bar{a}$.

Comm.: Many manuscripts preserve the reading pauraṇṭaka. We have accepted koraṇṭaka because this name is associated with the Haṭhābhyāsapaddhati. This reading is well attested by various manuscripts of the Haṭhapradīpikā, including those of group 2, as well as those of the Haṭharatnāvalī (Gharote 2009: 35 n. 3), which also attest gonandaka. Also, Goraṇṭakuḍu is the name of a disciple of Gorakṣanātha in the Navanāthacaritramu (Jones 2017:194 n.3). The compound siddhapāda could be a respectful affix. However, it seems unlikely here because it would cross the pāda break.

āllamaḥ prabhudevaś ca ghoḍācolī ca ṭhiṇṭhinī | bhālukir nāgadevaś ca khaṇḍī kāpālikas tathā ||

Comm.: The name Allamaprabhudeva (sometimes Allama Prabhu Deva or Allama Prabhudeva in secondary literaure) is largely transmitted as allamaḥ prabhudevaḥ, as though it were two names, although some manuscripts of the Haṭhapradīpikā have allamaprabhudevaś ca (i.e., Tue,V3,V8,V13,V16,V22,Vu,N24,N26) and so do some of the Haṭharatnāvalī (i.e., P,T,t1 in Gharote 2009: 35 n. 8).

The names Nāgabodha, Nāgabodhi, Naradeva, Nāgadeva all seem possible in 1.8c.

Many witnesses have khaṇḍa and kāpālika as separate names. However, khaṇḍakāpālika is well attested. Examples include Kathāsaritsāgara 121.5 ff. (check), Bṛhatkathāmañjarī 10.45 (check) and Vajrapāṇi's Laghutantraṭīkā, p.45 (vīrāḥ khaṇḍakāpālikādayaś caturviṃśatiḥ). It may be a derogatory name for a Kāpālika, coined perhaps by an outsider and connoting something like a defective Kāpālika in the sense of a 'part-time' Kāpālika. Alternatively, it could simply refer to one who used a broken skull as a bowl.

Comm.: The compound <code>saṃsāratāpa</code> is well attested and found elsewhere (e.g., <code>Viṣṇupurāṇa</code> 6.7.62, <code>Agnipurāṇa</code> 371.1, <code>Haṭhatattvakaumudī</code> 38.92, emphHaṭhābhyāsapaddhati ms. 46/440, f. 1v). The reading of <code>samāśrayo</code> in V1 is metrically faulty. The accepted reading <code>āśrayo</code> [']yam is better metically and well attested. N23 preserves the reading <code>samāśrayamaṭho</code> <code>haṭhaḥ</code> (similar to the <code>Yogasārasamgraha</code>), which is similar to the fourth <code>pāda</code>. Though this reading is possible, it seems more likely that it came about through dittography. The word 'jagatām is probably authorial because it makes good sense with <code>ādhārakamaṭha</code> in light of the cosmological notion that the tortoise supports all the worlds. However, this reading may not have been understood by some and was changed in the vulgate and other witnesses to 'yuktānām instead.

Comm.: In the Jyotsnā and printed editions of the Haṭhapradīpikā, including one by Digambara and Kokaje (1970: 6), this verse has the additional hemistich, dhanuḥpramāṇaparyantaṃ śilāgnijalavarjite. This hemistich derives from the Gorakṣaśataka (32cd), which has °paryante instead of °paryantaṃ. It stipulates that the hut should be built in a place measuring up to a bow length and free from rocks, fire and water. None of the early manuscripts have this hemistich which suggests that it was added at a later time. Nonetheless, it appears in over a dozen manuscripts that were consulted for this edition. These manuscripts are not close to an early hyparchetype of the text.

Comm.: The syntax of this verse is rather problematic. One would expect the features of the hut, which are listed in the first three pādas of the verse, to be in the nominative case, with the words idaṃ lakṣaṇaṃ in the fourth pāda referring back to them. However, the compounds in the first three pādas appear to qualify lakṣaṇa as though they were adjectives, and this appears to have been the way the verse was composed.

The manuscripts preserve many different readings at the end of the compound beginning with <code>arandhragarta*</code>. The reading <code>pitharam</code> has been suggested by Dominic Goodall, who understands it as potsherds (ask ref from Dominic?). The sense is that the hut should be free of rubbish, such as potsherds. One would expect a word for a defect in a hut that is similar to, but not the same as, cracks (<code>randhra</code>) and holes (<code>garta</code>). For this reason, the reading <code>vivaram</code> looks like a patch, as its meaning does not add anything to <code>randhragarta*</code>. The reading <code>vitapam</code> is well attested among the witnesses of the <code>Hathapradīpikā</code> and <code>Hatharatnāvalī</code>. However, it is difficult to construe in this context unless it was intended to refer to creepers or branches that might invade or encroach upon the hut.

Nearly all the early mss. have "bādhojjitaṃ, whereas the Yogacintāmaṇi and V19 have the more easily understood reading of "jantūjjhitaṃ ('free from creatures'). However, "bādhojjitaṃ may have been original because it is so well attested and a hut is described similarly in Suśrutasaṃhitā 6.17.67 (grhe nirābādhe).

Comm.: It is impossible to be certain about the meaning of niyamagraha, as the manuscripts do not indicate whether an avagraha (i.e., prajalpo 'niyamagraha) was intended. Although yama and niyama are not included in the Haṭhapradīpikā as auxiliaries of Haṭhayoga, verse 2.14 implies that niyama is necessary at least in the early stages of establishing a practice. Furthermore, verse 3.82 suggests that a yogi who does not practice niyama might obtain success in yoga through the practice of vajroli. Ambiguity over the role of yama and niyama in Haṭhayoga appears to have prompted some to insert verses on ten yamas and ten niyamas after the next verse (1.16). The additional verses may derive from the Śāradātilakatantra (25.7–8) or the Vasisthasamhitā (1.38, 1.53). In the Jyotsnā, Brahmānanda reads niyamā- graha and takes it as though $\bar{a}graha$ was implied, which yields the meaning of 'over-insistence on rules', and he relates it to extreme ascetic practice.

Comm.: For the second $p\bar{a}da$, the north-Indian manuscripts have something along the lines of $tattvaj\bar{n}\bar{a}n\bar{a}c$ ca $darśan\bar{a}t$. The problem with this reading is the meaning of darśana by itself (i.e., discernment of what?). The early sources of this verse, in particular the $\acute{s}ivadhar-mottara$, indicate that the second pāda read as $santoṣ\bar{a}t$ $tattvadarśan\bar{a}t$, which makes much better sense of the word darśana (i.e., 'seeing the truth'). It seems that this reading may have been adopted by Svātmārāma because the word $santoṣ\bar{a}t$ is present in the south-Indian manuscripts. At some point in the transmission, $tattvadarśan\bar{a}t$ became $tattvaj\bar{n}\bar{a}n\bar{a}t$ and santoṣāt was dropped. The word darśanāt was changed to viniścayāt in V19 and the Yogacintāmaṇi, which indicates that we are not alone in questioning its meaning. The problem with viniścayāt in pāda two is that niścayāt is widely attested in pāda one. It should also be noted that the word tattva could have a more specific meaning in the Haṭḥapradīpikā (4.3) as Svātmārāma states that it is a synonym of samādhi. In other yoga texts, it can sometimes refer to the practices of yoga (e.g., tritattva in Amrtasiddhi 13.12, 14.2–3).

haṭhasya prathamāṅgatvād āsanaṃ dārśyate mayā | tat kuryād āsanaṃ sthairyam ārogyam cāṅgapāṭavam ||

Comm.: The reading of aṅgapāṭavam is attested among most of the early manuscripts. Although this compound rarely appears in other yoga texts, a similar term śarīrapāṭava occurs in the Śivasaṃhitā (2.35) as one of the benefits bestowed by digestive fire (vaiśvā-narāgni), which indicates that the word pāṭava was used in relation to the body and the benefits of yoga. The compound aṅgapāṭava seems to imply the optimal functioning of the body. However, the alternative reading, aṅgalāghava ('lightness of the limbs' or 'dexterity') is more common in yoga texts, even in works known to Svātmārāma, such as the Dattātreyayogaśāstra (śarīralaghutā) and the Amanaska ([...] laghutvaṃ ca śarīrasyopajāy-ate). Therefore, it is likely that the less common term aṅgapāṭavam was changed to the more widely used notion of aṅgalāghava, perhaps early on in the transmission, as the latter is attested by group two (i.e., N23, V19, etc.)

Comm.: One might wonder how the soles of the feet could be placed between the knees and thighs. Brahmānanda explains that the region of the shank near the knee should be understood by the word 'knee' in this verse (atra jānuśabdena jānusaṃnihito jaṅghāpradeśo grāhyaḥ jānusaṃnihito jaṅghāpradeśaḥ). This is consistent with the earliest known description of svastikāsana in the Pātañjalayogaśāstravivaraṇa (2.46), which states that the big toes of one foot are tucked in between the shank and thigh of the other so it is not seen (daksinam pādānguṣṭham savyenorujanghena parigrhyādṛśyam kṛtvā tathā savyam pādānguṣṭhum dakṣinenorujankgenādṛśyam parihṛhya yathā ca pārṣṇibhyām vṛṣaṇayor apīḍanam tathā yenāste tat svastikam āsanam). For a discussion of svastikāsana in the Pātañjalayoga tradition, see Maas 2018: 68–69. The descriptions of svastikāsana in early Śaiva Tantras do not mention the inserting of the toes between the knees and thighs (see Goodall 2004: 348–350, fn. 371).

Comm.: This posture first appears in some Vaiṣṇava Saṃhitās that predate the Haṭhapradīpikā, namely, the Ahirbudhnyasaṃhitā and the Vasiṣṭhasaṃhitā. The position of the ankles is the same in all the source texts. However, an interesting feature of the description in the Ahirbudhnyasaṃhitā is the position of the hands, which are crossed behind the back and hold the big toes. The Haṭhapradīpikā's description, which derives from the Vasiṣṭhasaṃhitā, does not mention the position of the hands. For illustrations of six possible positions of the arms and hands, see Gharote, Jha, Devnath, Sakhalkar 2006: 111–113.

Comm.: Although most witnesses have $tath\bar{a}$ in 1.21a, the word atha has been accepted because it is attested by V1, the sources and the testimonia. It appears to be verse filler here rather than indicating a temporal sequence of actions. Svātmārāma borrowed the verse on $v\bar{i}r\bar{a}sana$ from the $Vasisthasamhit\bar{a}$, the redactor of which appears to have adapted its first hemistich from a description of this posture in the $S\bar{a}rad\bar{a}tilakatantra$. This would explain the rather strange syntax of the $Vasisthasamhit\bar{a}$'s version, in which adhah $krtv\bar{a}$ was changed to athaikasmin, and tathetaram became ca samsthitam. It seems that samsthitam must be understood with $\bar{u}rum$ in the third $p\bar{a}da$ in the sense of $samsth\bar{a}pya$ (i.e., 'having placed').

Different versions of vīrāsana are found in earlier Tantras, such as the Kiraṇatantra (58.9), Hemacandra's Yogaśāstra and commentaries on the Pātañjalayogaśāstra. For a discussion of some of these sources, see Maas 2018: 66–68.

Comm.: In the first pāda, the witnesses are split between nirudhya ('having blocked'), nibadhya ('having bound'), niyamya ('having restrained') and niṣpūdya ('having pressed'). The source, the Vasiṣṭhasaṃhitā, supports nirudhya whereas the testimonia supports niyamya. In terms of closing the anus by sitting on the ankles, nirudhya makes better sense and has been adopted because it is supported by N23 (an important witness of group 2) and the manuscripts reported in the critical edition of the Vasiṣṭhasaṃhitā. The word vyutkrameṇa appears to describe the position of the ankles. Its basic meaning is 'against the normal direction', which would suggest that the ankles are turned out or crossed rather than placed together naturally. If the yogi is in a kneeling-type position, turning the feet out would bring the ankles together, blocking the perineal area. See Yoga Mīmāṃsā, vol 8, no. 2, pp. 29–30 for a discussion of vyutkramena and the position of the ankles in kūrmāsana, and vol 8, no.2, Figures 3–6 for photographs of a practitioner performing this āsana.

Adopt bandhastho with note. °bandhastha not found in any other texts. While °vat kṛtvā is possible, it is a singular reading that appears to be unrelated to the other variants.

Comm.: Difficult to construe first half of verse: We have not found an instance in another verse where <code>jaṭhara</code> means <code>jaṭharāgni</code>. So, the reading <code>jvalana</code> is better and most of the witnesses that have it attest <code>jvalanapradīptam</code>. This compound has been accepted and understood as a reverse <code>bahuvrīhi</code> (i.e., 'the āsana by which the digestive fire is kindled). J10 and J17 have <code>jaṭharapravṛddha</code>, which would qualify <code>pracaṇḍaruṅmaṇḍala</code>°, but it seems rather to strange to say that a range of terrible diseases have increased in the stomach, rather than arisen in the stomach. KDham ed has variant <code>jaṭharapradīpaṃ</code> but this is not attested among the oldest dated manuscripts.

Pāda d, J10ac and J17 have candra for daṇḍa; However, also in Yogacintāmaṇi and 6-chapter HP.

Comm.: Only V1 has dorbhyāṃ padāgra, others have variations on the much inferior dvāb-hyāṃ karābhyāṃ. The karābhyaṃ reading was probably introduced to remove dorbhyāṃ, which usually means arms. The reading tāṇabandhaḥ in V1 doesn't work with idaṃ.

Comm.: In Pādas ac Svātmārāma may have rewritten Śivasaṃhitā 3.96 to include the information that it was Śiva (śivena) who taught the 84 āsanas, whereas in the source Śiva is himself speaking. With this Svātmārāma confuses the verse, since one would have to understand Pādas cd to be direct speech by Śiva in order to understand bravīmi correctly (but cf. 4.2 which is a verse from the Gorakṣaśataka which includes pravakṣyāmi).

The Śivasaṃhitā follows 3.96 with teachings on siddha, padma, paścimottāna and svastika āsanas, but the HP teaches siddha, padma, siṃha and bhadra.

The word tu is often used to introduce a new posture, but in this verse seems to be a verse filler.

Comm.: It is likely that the original version of this verse contained the vocative with the imperative form of the verb. There is another instance where Svātmārāma included a verse with the vocative (4.58?) or the subject in the first person (4.2), as though the text were a dialogue. In this case, it seems that efforts have been made to write out the vocative and imperative verb. However, the sukhe and sukham is difficult to construe in this context, because the context suggests that the intended meaning was that one should always sit in Siddhāsana (as opposed to the other three), rather than the prescription to always sit in a comfortable Siddhāsana.

Comm.: iva or eva? iva does work — like siddhāsana, mitāhāra and ahiṃsā are the best, but for it to work properly mitāhāra and ahiṃsā should be accusative. V19 has acc + iva, which seems best, especially with siddhāḥ viduḥ, but this might be a correction as V19 often corrects. However, one old KDham BORI (?) ms (pha, 1695 CE) has it, as does Jyotsnā, so adopt.

In pāda d V19 has siddhāsanam idaṃ viduḥ, but the reading of all other mss is preferable.

Clearly based on DYŚ 33, which includes ekam and mukhya.

Comm.: Odd to have suṣumnām as object of abhyaset. Yogacintāmaṇi has this reading though. Perhaps cd were added somewhat indiscriminately by Svātmārāma (with nominative suṣumnā) and then others tried to make sense of it.

Some witnesses, including Jyotsnā, have nāḍīnāṃ malaśodhanam/e for pāda d, which is probably a patch (no other texts say siddhāsana clears the channels), but cf. Amṛtasiddhi in which the practices are said to bring about cālana of the nāḍīs (e.g. 11.6).

Good example of early contamination.

Comm.: uttabhya vs uttambhya. The witnesses split predictably along the two main branches of the stemma. The evidence of the DYŚ is important here.

The statement ending with pavanaṃ śanaiḥ is left hanging, perhaps, because of an eyeskip that happened early in the transmission. The subsequent verse in the DYŚ ends with pavanaṃ śanaiḥ.

The manuscript readings with vakṣa sthāpayet (J7, V3, J8, J10, J17, N17) or something similar (V1, W4) do not offer a solution nor indicate how Svātmārāma may have redacted this to make the syntax complete. Instead, it seems that he quoted these two verses (1.45–46) from the Dattātreyayogaśāstra and simply omitted the next verse that made sense of pavanaṃ śanaiḥ because it was not relevant to the posture itself.

[JH] The background of the passage $r\bar{a}jadantam\bar{u}lam$ ca jihvayā uttambhya in 1.46 is more complex than it may appear. Here it is a literal quotation from the DYŚ, but many other Haṭhayogic texts teach a particular position of the tongue, in which it is in one or the other way turned back in the direction of the uvula, as we read explicitly in the Vivekamārtāṇḍa (REF): kapālakuhare jihvā praviṣṭā viparītagā. Brief references to this practice can become ambiguous for various reasons, and this has possibly confused Brahmānanda.

One reason is that there is a, probably older, rule for meditation postures according to which the tongue rests near the teeth. One instance would be Svacchandatantra, which teaches a meditation pose called divyaṃ karaṇam (4.365f.), in which the tongue is to rest at the tip of the teeth (dantāgre jihvām ādāya). Other Tantric texts have this or similar rules, in which the tongue is supposed to rest either on the teeth or the palate,² the earliest instance being perhaps Mrgendrāgama ?.18. Placing the tongue where it does not disturb the meditation seems quite appropriate for a "normal" meditative practice.

[Jason: There's also a clear reference to the tip of the tongue being placed in the middle of the palate in 2.27 of the Yogapāda of the Mataṅgapārameśvaratantra (tālumadhyagatenaiva jihvāgreṇa mahāmune). In fact, in works that predate Haṭhayoga (i.e., 11th c.), the most common instruction is to put the tip of the tongue on the palate (tālu).]

We might try to interpret the passage in this manner, however, once Haṭhayogic physiology is at the background, we must assume that the aim is to reach back to the uvula, to the source of the "nectar". For the background and for the crucial references see Mallinson's note on $Khecar\bar{\imath}vidy\bar{a}$ 1.65ab. Confusingly Yogic terminology has used and possibly invented new names for uvula, and among these especially the term $r\bar{a}jadanta$ may give rise to confusion, since, as we have seen, the tongue might also in some Yoga systems be placed at the (front) teeth.

Furthermore the details in these descriptions of the khecarīmudrā are manifold. The 10th century Mokṣopāya says that the tongue rests at the "source of the palate" and the commentary Saṃṣārataraṇi on the parallel passage in Laghuyogavāṣiṣṭha V.6.155, which reads tālumūlāntarālagnajihva-, explains that this means that the tongue is to be placed in the middle of the two regions of the palate, and that this is the nabhomudrā, alias "khecarī". 5

A little later in the $Mok sop \bar{a}ya$ it is made clear that one should reach the uvula, "placed a the root of the palate".

In view of this background we must conclude that the author of the Jyotsnā was probably not aware of the Yogic meaning of rājadanta and has tried his best to make sense of the passage, echoing the idea of the two roots of the palate (although his text is not talking about the palate), but then wisely refers to the instruction of the teacher for practical details, probably noticing that his literal interpretation is somewhat opaque (I omit the synonyms for clarity):

Pressing both roots of the front teeth on the left and right with the tongue [...] — this fixation of the tongue has to be understood from the mouth of the teacher.

rājadantānām daṃṣṭrāṇām savyadakṣiṇabhāge sthitānām mūle ubhe mūlasthāne jihvayā uttambhya ūrdhvaṃ stambhayitvā | guru-mukhād avagantavyo 'yaṃ jihvā-bandhaḥ |

[Jason: also, Brahmānanda's comments on 3.22 indicate that he thought rājadanta refers to the front teeth. When commenting on rājadantasthajihvāyām, he says kutaḥ? yato dantānām rājādon rājadantā rājadanteṣu tiṣṭhatīti rājadantasthāḥ, rājadantasthā cāsau jihvā ca tasyām rājadantasthajihvāyām bandhaḥ, taduparibhāgasya sambandhaḥ śastaḥ].

Comm.: The reading of matsyamataṃ in the subheading is unusual because elsewhere Matsyendra is not referred to as simply Matsya. Furthermore, this verse is from the Vivekamārtaṇḍa (36), and the teachings of the Vivekamārtaṇḍa are attributed to Gorakṣa, not Matsyendra. However, in the extended recension of it known as the Gorakṣaśataka, Gorakṣasaṇhitā, etc. the second verse includes homage to Mīna, i.e. Matsyendra.

The end of pāda b is uncertain. Later witnesses including Brahmānanda have dhyāyaṃś ca but none of the early ones has this reading. So, we have to take dhyānaṃ with sannidhāya. However, tat is problematic because here it has no clear referent. In the Vivekamārtaṇḍa tat appears to refer to the mokṣadvāra broken by Kuṇḍalinī, which is mentioned in the previous verse.

The two participles proccālayan and muñcan imply that the two things are happening at the same time, which is surprising but perhaps possible. Or perhaps one can understand them as sequential.

In the VM this verse comes in the passage on raising Kuṇḍalinī, so tat could refer to visualising K opening the mokṣadvāra.

Comm.: 55c is ra-vipulā with $n\bar{a}d\bar{i}$ The second hemistich can be interpreted in different ways. One possibility is to understand $n\bar{a}d\bar{i}suddhim$ as a bahuvrīhi qualifying $mudr\bar{a}dipavanakriy\bar{a}m$ in the sense that one should practise a breathing technique with mudrās from which purification of the channels arise. Alternatively, one could separate $mudr\bar{a}d\bar{i}$ from $pavanakriy\bar{a}m$ and understand three different techniques here, namely, the practice of purifying the channels (perhaps by the alternative nostril method mentioned at the beginning of the second chapter), the $mudr\bar{a}s$ and the breathing techniques of prāṇāyāma.

Transl.: Success arises for one engaged in practice. How can it arise for one who has no practice? Success in yoga does not arise by merely reading scriptures.

Wearing a robe does not bring about success, nor does talking [about yoga]. Practice alone is the cause of success. This is true, there is no doubt. In this tradition, it should not be given to one who wears robes and is devoted to his genitals and stomach.

Comm.: 1.55*1–2 are omitted from V1 and V19, so may not have been included in the earliest version of the text. In fact, it is possible that both were added (perhaps initially as marginal notes) to elaborate on kriyā in 1.55d. Both verses are similar to verses from the Dattātreyayogaśāstra, and these verses (except 1.55.2ef) appear in the vulgate, but towards the end of chapter 1 (1.65–66).

And then just half of DYŚ 47 is given, resulting in a near-nonsensical hemistich.

The syntax of 1.55.2ef is corrupt. One has to emend to $dey\bar{a}$ to make sense of it.

Comm.: It is very difficult to find a reason why this verse should be inserted here. It is apparently a muktaka that would befit an accomplished spiritual poem more than our Haṭhapradīpikā, even here, in what appears as a sort of miscellaneous section at the end of a chapter. In this verse, the lyrical subject wonders about why the mind is still able to doubt, despite its insight into the nature of reality and the reader wonders, how the illusionist verse could be understood to fit our Yoga text, perhaps the scribe of the archetype of V19 and N17, was fond of it.

The source is, as far as we can say, the Śāntiśataka of the Kashmirian poet Sillana or Silhaṇa, ho cannot be dated with any certainty, but predates the HP by a few centuries. The edition of this text – where hundred original verses had to be identified – places it into an appendix of doubtful stanzas, but the editor saw no compelling reason not to regard it as original except through the fact that it is not transmitted in all manuscripts. What prevents further investigation of the matter is the lack of Kashmirian mss. for the Śāntiśataka and its compilatory character: one quarter of the material is identical with Bhartrhari's Vairā- gyaśataka. A still superficial glance at Sillana's Svātmopalabdhiśataka gives the impression that our verse would fit there, but not so much in the Śāntiśataka. Perhaps its first citation is in Advayavajra's Tattvaratnāvalī (ref??), While these are only preliminary observations the verse is probably not original in any stage of development of the HYP, but limited to V19 (and N17).

Kumbhaka is almost always masculine.

Marmasthāna: not clear whether to adopt citro or citraṃ, or V19's mudrākhyaṃ karaṇaṃ tathā or the others' mudrādikaranāni ca.

See also 1.65, which has mudrādikaraṇāni ca, so perhaps it was through confusion with this that the same reading is found in some witnesses of 1.56.

Yes, V19 reading probably best.

It seems likely that Svātmārāma was using a version of the VM with tyāgī (as it's unlikely that yogī would be emended to tyāgī), but whether this was the original reading in the VM is more complicated because there tyāgī may be a dittographical-type mistake.

Comm.: 59a kaṭvamla° is better than kaṭvāmla° and well attested elsewhere in lists of tastes and types of foods. On the meaning of uṣṇa (in relation to food) see Meulenbeld 1974: 254 fn. 13: 'Cakra mentions as a variant: katvamlalavaṇakṣāra (pungent. acid, saline and caustic). Cakra remarks that the term 'hot' (uṣṇa) denotes hot on touch when it occurs the first time, and hot with regard to potency when it occurs for the second time.'

 $^{\circ}$ hari($\bar{\imath}$ here for metre?) $taś\bar{a}ka^{\circ}$ in some nighanțus is horseradish, which makes better sense here than Brahmānanda's gloss.

śigrur haritaśākaś ca śākapattraḥ supattrakaḥ |

Sauśrutanighantu 75ab

śigruko haritaśākaś ca mato vai mūlapatrakaḥ |

Brahmānanda's understanding of harītaśāka as patraśāka is probably wrong if patraśāka was intended as 'leafy vegetables'. But perhaps patraśāka can also mean śigru (note śākapattrah above).

Anusvāra at end of śāka?

°sauvīra° probably means sour gruel. Brahmānanda: $sauvīra = k\bar{a}\tilde{n}jika$ (fermented rice water). Meulenbeld, madhavanidāna pp. 516–517 $sauv\bar{v}ra$ is sour gruel made from barley and wheat. On the process see, Suśruta 1.44.35–40ab. (PV Sharma's translation of this passage:)

'Roots of trivṛt etc., the first group (vidārigandhādi), mahat pañcamūla, mūrvā and śārṅgaṣṭā, and also of snuhī, haimavatī, triphalā, ativiṣā and vacā – these are taken and divided into two parts out of which one is decocted and the other is powdered; now, crushed barley grains are impregnated with the above decoction several times, dried and then slightly fried. Taking three parts of this and one part of the above powder are put in a jar and mixed with their (of trivṛt, etc.) cold decoction and fermented properly. This is known as sauvīraka.'

But according to some nighantus, sauvīra can also mean stibnite (an ingredient in some añjana's and medicines):

Rājanighantu 13.86

añjanam yāmunam kṛṣṇam nādeyam mecakam tathā srotojam drkpradam nīlam sauvīram ca suvīrajam ||

Note also that the Yogaprakāśikā takes sauvīra with taila, perhaps to solve the problem of taila on its own (see below for more on this): sauvīrataila – oil produced in the place Suvīra (suvīradeśodbhavatailam).

Suvīra , a country the people of which, also called Suvira (V.79), Sauvira (XVI.21) and Sauvīraka (IV.23) ... S.M. Ali identifies it with the Rohri - Khairpur region of Sind (Geography of the Purānas, Delhi, 1966, p. 144).

taila could refer to tilataila: Śārṅgadharasaṃhitā: anuktāvasthāyāṃ paribhāṣāvidhiḥ [...] taile 'nukte tilodbhavam 48

Dominik Wujastyk supplied this reference and may be able to comment more on taila in this list.

On the translation of madya, see Mchugh (An Unholy Brew) 2021: 8.

ājādimāṃsa: āja° is required for the metre, so only ājādi makes sense, not ājāvi because there is no adjective āvi.

Diwakar Acharya: prohibition of goat flesh and fish is aimed at north/east India.

kulattha is a kind of pulse, translated by Dominik Wujastyk as 'poor man's pulse' (see Roots of Ayurveda).

kola: Zizyphus Jujuba (Nadkarni 1926: pp. 919–920). Also known as badara. This is how Brahmānanda takes it (kolam kolyāḥ phalam badaram). According to Nadkarni, the fruit of the wild variety is very acid and astringent. It is believed to purify the blood and assist digestion. The bark is astringent and a simple remedy for diarrhoea. Root is useful as a decoction in fever and delirium. kola can mean banana in some parts of India (Diwakar)

There are references to kola being pungent, though this does not seem to indicate sufficiently why kola is mentioned separately as an apathya food.

piṇyāka: Sharma (Ḥalhaṇa and his commentary on drugs: 1982: 69) says, 'The remnant paste of oily seeds after pressing out the oil content is called piṇyāka.' Diwakar says it is an oil cake that has a strong flavour.

hingu: Asafoetida (Nadkarni 1926: pp 360–361): 'Iflong continued even in moderate doses, it gives rise to alliaceous eructations, acrid irritation in the throat, flatulence, diarrhoea and burning in the urine.'

laśuna = garlic (Nadkarni 1926: 45).

Comm.: We have understood the compound kadaśanaśākotkaṭa as a dvandva referring to spoiled food (kadaśana) and an excess of leafy vegetables (śākotkaṭa). We have not found any conclusive evidence for the meaning of tilapiṇḍa. Brahmānanda glosses it as piṇyāka (on which see the notes for the previous verse).

Not sure how to take kadaśanaśākotkaṭaṃ. Brahmānanda understands it as a dvandva (i.e., kadaśana, śāka, utkaṭa), where śāka is prohibited vegetables and utkaṭa is pepper.

The meaning of utkaṭa is not clear. The word utkaṭā can mean pepper according to some nighaṇṭus (e.g., Rājanighaṇṭu 5.16 pārvatī śailajā tāmrā lambabījā tathotkaṭā). But utkaṭa can refer to Saccharum Sara and utkaṭā also to Laurus Cassia (cinnamon).

Also, utkaṭa can be an adjective that means 'abounding in' at the end of a compound. So could kadaśanaśākotkaṭaṃ have been intended as an adjectival tatpuruṣa along the lines of '[food] full of spoiled vegetables'?

paṭola can refer to at least two different gourds. See Meul. p. 569 for a long list of possibilities, including TRICHOSANTHES DIOICA ROXB. ('pointed gourd'), T. CUCUMERINA LINN (snake gourd).

Nadkarni has two entries on patola:

- 1. snake gourd (Nadkarni p. 863) is common in Bengal and cultivated in Northern India and Punjab. The unripe fruit of this climbing plant is generally used as a culinary vegetable and is very wholesome, specially suited for the convalescent.
- smooth luffa (Nadkarni p. 518) is a hairy climbing herb extensively cultivated in several parts of India. The fruit is edible. Medicinally it is described as 'cool, costive, demulcent, producive of loss of appetite and excitive of wind, bile and phlegm") Wikipedia : smooth luffa = Luffa aegyptiaca (sponge gourd) Sharma (Syn. Kulaka. Well known (Trichosanthas dioica Roxb.)

Brahmānanda glosses it as kośātakī (Meul p. 586 LUFFA ACUTANGULA ROXB), which suggests he thought it was some sort of luffa.

Brahmānanda also mentions the vernacular term paravara for paṭola, which the Lonavla ed. states is a kind of cucumber. However, Paras remarked that paravara is more like a gourd (hard shell, etc.).

It is not entirely clear how we should understand divya. Brahmānanda glosses it with nir-doṣa and takes it with udaka. But could it refer more specifically to gaṅgāmbu (as suggested by Paras) or rain water? MW has divyodaka n. 'divine water' i.e. rainwater L.

The term divyodaka appears in Āyurvedic works (but we're yet to find a gloss in a commentary). E.g., Astāṅgahṛdaya 8.42–43
